

CHECKLIST

- ☐ Showing respect to each family, their choices, culture, spirituality, values, and beliefs, provides the cornerstone of good clinical practice at the end of life. Consider the practical ways in which you can respect, empower, and support families of children with a life-limiting illness. Some examples include:
  - Know what matter to each family member, don't assume
  - Ask, "What concerns you the most?"
  - Set up a family meeting as an opportunity to clarify goals of care.
- ☐ View end-of-life care decision-making as an ongoing process, rather than a single event. Ask, "If it looked like your child was approaching the end of their life, what would make this time the best it could possibly be?"
- ☐ When talking to a child with a life-limiting illness, actively listen to their questions and concerns. Observe their play and non-verbal behaviours for clues on how they may be feeling. Keep language simple and accurate.
- ☐ After a child dies, allow the family to express strong emotions. Give them the time and privacy they need, while also offering your support and reassurance. Remember, a wide range of grief reactions are normal. Be aware of local grief and bereavement supports and services available to families.
